

du·plic·i·tous

adj.

Given to or marked by deliberate deceptiveness in behavior or speech.

John Diehl says, “I work for you, not special interests”, but...

...he takes big bucks from special interests* and privately tells citizens, “I don’t care what the people want.”

John Diehl has taken over $1.4 million from special interests since 2011. 98% from outside the district, and over a quarter million dollars from out of state. -- <http://www.MoLeadershipProject.org/money-Trail.php>

On the other hand, John Diehl told citizens, “I don’t care what the people want.”, when they were lobbying for a bill requiring truly auditable paper ballots 22 of the 24 Republican Senators had already voted for it. -- <http://www.moleadershipproject.org/issue-election-integrity.php>

John Diehl says he supports the Second Amendment, but...

...as majority floor leader, he killed the Second Amendment Preservation Act and tried to make it look like it was the Senate’s fault. -- <http://www.MoLeadershipProject.org/issue-SAPA.php>

On the last day of the legislative session, John Diehl had two options that would have definitely passed that bill and a third option that gave it a chance, but he instead chose to amend the bill so it would have to return to the Senate for another vote, where it faced a certain filibuster with only 20 minutes left.

John Diehl says he now supports outlawing red light cameras and that he supported legislation to do so, but...

...as majority floor leader, he would not allow the bill that outlawed red light cameras up for debate, but he promoted a bill that would help one of his donors, American Traffic Solutions, Inc., to get around several appeals court rulings that went against them. -- <http://www.MoLeadershipProject.org/issue-RedLightCameras.php>

John Diehl says he will fight against Common Core, but...

...in the 2014 legislative session, John Diehl actually sided with Google on Common Core and supported a bill that compromises our children’s personal data. After feeling the heat from mad moms, he claims he’ll fight the Department of Education with budget constraints, but in contrast to a permanent fix like passing a law prohibiting Common Core and broad data collection, if he follows through his “solution” means parents will have to fight the same budget battle every year. -- <http://www.MoLeadershipProject.org/issue-CommonCore.php>
